Cantine Dragani started their business way back in 1812. In that year the burgomaster of Caldari at that time signed a document that authorized one Dragani Emanuele to sell his products in the territory covered by that Commune. Even then the Dragani family were owners of their most famous estates. It is likely that the two landholdings were rented from the monks of the convent in Frisa, who owned the neighboring territories at that time, and as the years rolled by the two estates became the Dragani family's natural habitat, that is to say where the family made the wine for its own consumption. Naturally farming methods have gradually evolved over the years and nowadays they are considered the best available.

Over the decades Cantine Dragani has come to represent a point of reference in Abruzzo's wine making sector. It has always had the objective of bringing local wines to the public eye and enhancing the product via an efficient distribution network that offers only bottled wines in a number of different lines and formats to satisfy even the most demanding customer.
